A New Kind of Service

The cost of operating rail diesel service is excessive. In order to preserve the line between Fox Chase and Newtown, SEPTA had to come up with a way to make it affordable.

Our answer is the new Fox Chase Rapid Transit Line operated by thoroughly trained SEPTA employees. Because the line is now a transit operation — as compared to a commuter railroad line — we are no longer required to pay unneeded employees to run trains with too many cars. Crew sizes and train lengths have been cut in half while the service level has been maintained, and a midday train added (see the new schedule in this leaflet).

This is a pioneer service. The SEPTA Fox Chase Rapid Transit Line is the first operation of its kind in the United States.

Interchange at Fox Chase

There are no through trains between Reading Terminal and Newtown. Persons commuting to and from Philadelphia will change trains — between the SEPTA and Conrail operated services — at the Fox Chase Station.

SEPTA has planned the schedule so there will be a minimum wait at Fox Chase. Trips between Newtown and Reading Terminal will take just 70 minutes or less.

Separate Fare Payments

When traveling between Philadelphia and Newtown on the commuter rail line operated by Conrail and the rapid transit service operated by SEPTA, separate fares must be paid. Pay the regular railroad fare on trains to and from Reading Terminal, and pay a cash fare on the SEPTA Fox Chase Rapid Transit Line.

Improvements to the Line

As part of SEPTA's determination to preserve rail service in the Fox Chase-Newtown corridor where there is little alternate public transit service, a $650,000 improvement project was completed this past summer. SEPTA's contractors have upgraded track, ties and roadbed so the new rapid transit line can give you a smoother, safer ride.

At the same time, a new shelter at Fox Chase, with its enclosed waiting room, was completed in September to make your train changes free from worries about the weather.
